The combined duties and advantages of Professor of the Coleja and Geologist of the State, together with his extensive and varied acquirements in the different departments of Natural varied acquirements in the different departments of Natural Science, furnished Mr. Hitchcock with peculiar facilities for preparing an elementary work on Geology, which facilities he has improved, not more for his own credit than for the advance-appearance, rendered still more valuable than the first by the addition of some recent interesting discoveries in the science.

Rev Dr. John Pye Smith, of Homerton College, near London, on the importance of science for the advancement of religion, remarks: "It would be a perilous state for the interests of religion, that 'precious jewel,' witose essential characters are wisdom, knowledge, and joy,' if the professional teachers should be, in this respect, inferior to the young and inquiring members of their congregations. For those preaching among the heather, a competent acquaintance with natural objects is of signal importance."

a competent acquaintance with natural objects is of signal the portance."

Dr. S. aids: "To answer these purposes in the hands of the intelligent and studious ministers of Christ, this work of Professor Hitchcock appears to me especially suited. Though I fail the rayself that I have studied with advantage the best English treatises on Geology, and find ever new improvement and pleasure from them, and have also paid some attention to French and German books of this class, I think it no disparagement to them to profess my conviction that, with the views just mentioned, this is the book which I long to see brought into extensive use.

Rev. Justin Perkins. American Missionary in Persia, after expressing in a letter to Professor II. a strong interest in the Geology of his field of labor, and of the claims of this and other sciences upon American Missionaries, aidds: "I know not that I can better atone for my own deficiency in this respect than by requesting you in my behalf to arge upon the missionary students in College the kigh importance of their obtaining a good practical knowledge of Geology and Mineralogy while attending your lectures, as they would enhance their usefulness in future life. It is the combined light of all truth, scientific as well as religious, which is to render so perfect and glorious the splendor of millerial day."

Rev. Mr. Heodrd, also an American Missionary, and Principal of the Seminary at Beyroot, after expressing in a letter to the Professor great interest in science as connected with his mission, remarks that he is about commencing a course of lectures to his pupils on Mineralogy and Geology.
